Dear Sir / Madam,

Before Australians go rushing out to enjoy their new found liberty in John Howard's brave new world of 'freedom of speech', they might consider the implications of what they might say. If, for example, they were to begin to identify as scapegoats for the national economic and social ills, specific minority groups in the community who have had a long history of persecution in Australian society (like Kooris and Asians), then we may face some serious problems. After all, that would be very reminiscent of Germany in the 1930's, wouldn't it?

Yours Sincerely,

GARY FOLEY
